Recommendation: Unverifiable Rumors

Content Distribution Policy

Issue

---

We remove content when we know it is false and has the potential to contribute to imminent physical harm or violence. We implement this policy based on input from local partners. We also want to stop the spread of rumors that are likely to contribute to violence even if we can't always functionally verify whether the claims are false. However, we don't want to restrict speech that turns out to be true.

Unverifiable Rumors

Status Quo

We remove misinformation that could contribute to imminent violence or physical harm.

- To operationalize the policy, we have on-boarded local organizations and international institutions, who are often the first to become aware of inaccurate or misleading information that may contribute to physical harm or violence.
- We also have secure channels for these organizations to reach out to us and escalate content quickly.

Unverifiable Rumors

Status Quo - Examples

The first two examples do not meet the requirements for removal as misinformation that is false and has the potential to contribute to imminent physical harm or violence because they are not provably false. As unverifiable rumors, however, they still have the potential to contribute to offline harm or violence and are reflective of the type of content we want to capture as we work to update our policy.

Unverifiable Rumors

Findings From Research and External Outreach

- Most ‘harmful’ rumors targeted at vulnerable groups (rather than specific individuals) are unverifiable because they lack specificity or make sweeping claims about marginal groups.
- Greatest risk is from rumors with misleading content that have the potential to encourage a violent response against some target.
- Rumors that have led to violence in the past often reoccur, which makes it possible to identify unverifiable rumors with real risks of harm.
- Policy should focus on limiting amplification of high-risk rumors and consider parallel work with trusted local organizations in high-risk settings.
- Likelihood of harm is more important than whether the rumor is true or false.
- Document specific rumors and rumors that may recur.
- Remove, reduce, and inform depending on the type of rumors.

Policy Relevance: Policy should focus on limiting amplification of high-risk rumors and consider parallel work with trusted local organizations in high-risk settings.

Unverifiable Rumors

Option 1 (Rec)

Remove claims that are functionally unverifiable and are likely to contribute to violence or physical harm.

Pros

- Flexibility to address inciting rumors that could contribute to violence
- Allows Facebook to remove against a broad variety of rumors

Cons

- Risk of stifling speech
- Risk of removing true content

Unverifiable Rumors

Option 2

Remove content that meets the criteria set forth by Option 1 + require that the subject of the claim be a group that shares a protected characteristic.

Pros

- Addresses what many experts consider the most harmful rumors: ethnic, racial, and religious-identity related rumors
- Lower risk of stifling speech

Cons

- Limits Facebook's ability to address non-protected-characteristic rumors
- Risk of removing true content
